SURGERY FAQs

AFTER DISCHARGE

Will I need help at home?

You may need help at home after your surgery. This needs to be carefully considered and arranged before you have your surgery.

When can I drive?

Returning to driving is not a straight-forward question. You must feel confident to use the brake in an emergency situation. You may be able to drive in 4-8 weeks after surgery. This will depend on which foot undergoes surgery, type of surgery, how well you are recovering and whether your car is manual or automatic. Returning to driving may have insurance implications which need to be checked.

When can I return to work?

These time frames are speculative only and must be confirmed by our team:

- Sitting duties at 3 weeks after surgery.
- Standing duties indoors between 3 weeks- 2 months after surgery
- Outdoor duties 2 months after surgery.

Will I have pain?

Some patients experience more pain than others. This does not mean that the surgery was less successful. It is important to adequately manage your pain. Our team take multiple measures to reduce your pain during the post-operative period. When the local anaesthetic given to you at the time of surgery wears off, you will begin taking oral pain medication as prescribed. Your anaesthetist will discuss issues around pain medication prior to the operation. They will also provide you pain relief to take home.

When does the swelling stop?

Swelling is a normal part of healing. It can be very frustrating and although it usually reduces six weeks after surgery, it can last for longer. Rest and elevation are every important to help swelling.

How do I care for my wound?

You will be given instructions on how to care for your wound before discharge. Dressings and casts must be kept dry. When you have a shower, you will need to cover your foot with a bag and seal the top with tape. Dressings should remain intact until your 2 week review with Mr Goldbloom and the Wound Nurse Specialist, unless instructed otherwise. If your dressings become very blood stained, wet, too loose or too tight please contact Mr Goldbloom's rooms to arrange the dressings to be changed.
